Dear Federal Trade Commission Member,

I am writing to ask that you reconsider some of the requirements you are proposing to regulate the direct sales industry. I am a Senior Regional Vice President with PartyLite who has been proud to be involved in this business for over 13 years. I originally began my PartyLite business to overcome my fear of public speaking but I continue to do this business because of the income opportunity it provides for me and my family.

The proposals you are suggesting would make my business much more difficult and could potentially impact my income. There are two regulations that would directly affect my business. They are:

1) A Seven-Day Waiting Period before a prospective Consultant can begin their business. One of the best things about this business is that anyone can start earning money within a timeframe of two weeks. Most people join PartyLite wanting and often needing to earn money right away. This proposal would make them wait even longer and could effectively dampen the enthusiasm of a prospective Consultant.

2) Providing References to a prospective Consultant. I would never feel comfortable providing the personal contact information of other Consultants in PartyLite, nor would I want my own personal information given out without my permission.

Both of these regulations would create large amounts of paperwork and detailed record keeping which would take a large amount of my time away from building my business and from my family.

Please understand that I appreciate the FTC's goals in supporting all consumers, but the proposed regulations would negatively impact legitimate, professional direct sellers like me. You will only end up impacting my income, my future and my family's future.

Respectfully yours,

Kim Yanuskiewicz
Senior Regional Vice President
